PENSIERO DOMENICALE

Ogni volta che una tempesta si scatena nella nostra vita personale o in quella della nostra famiglia, nel cammino della chiesa, dello stato o del mondo, eccoci turbati, scoraggiati, tentati di credere che tutto è perduto. "Uomini di poca fede - ci dice Gesù Cristo, come ai suoi apostoli sul lago di Tiberiade -; perchè avete paura?". Se si tratta della chiesa, ne ha conosciuto lungo il corso della sua storia di queste ore tragiche, quando si arrivava a credere che per lei era finita! Dissensi interni, scismi, eresie, persecutoriali. Sappiamo che ne è sempre risorta più viva che mai.

Ascoltiamo oggi la chiesa stessa che ci invita, ad abbandonarci a Dio con piena fiducia.

Refugee Week

When we think of refugees, it is easy to be overwhelmed by the numbers and bad news. Nine million people, more than a third of Australia's population, have been driven from home in Sudan; most of the population of Gaza has been displaced; people have fled violence, starvation and poverty throughout the world; and governments in wealthy nations have increasingly treated refugees as less than human. Bad news comes in floods that can leave us despairing or apathetic.

The theme of Refugee Week (16-22 June) this year invites us to reflect on family and finding freedom. It draws our minds and hearts away from the tyranny of numbers to the lives of the women, men and children we call refugees. It invites us to see them from inside and to listen to the stories of their flight from the places and communities they called home. We may be awed by the passion for life and freedom that led them to seek life elsewhere, may celebrate the resilience that they have shown as they walked such a hard road, and may wonder at their devotion to family in the face of all the crises that test it.

We may also celebrate the kindness of strangers they have met along the way: the people who offered them shelter and food, welcomed them, helped them to settle in a strange new country and reached out to them in friendship on their long journey. These are the gifts that we would like our families to receive in hard times. They are also the qualities that we would like think are characteristic of our own nation. Refugee Week invites us to celebrate these qualities in those who treat others not as strangers but as sisters and brothers in the world family.
